PERFORMANCE MANAGEMENT TOOL FOR SUPPORT AND OUTREACH

This performance management tool provides you with a process and templates for conducting employee performance reviews within the Support and Outreach occupational cluster. It includes a selection of sample performance objectives for the behavioural competencies and proficiency levels relevant to the suggested competency profile.

This tool is useful as a template or starter guide, but it might not accurately represent the competencies required for the position you are evaluating.

To assess and revise the tool so it is well-suited to your organization:

- Review the tool to determine if the suggested competency profile is relevant.
- Adjust the profile, as necessary, to suit the job description and your organization.
- Review the behavioural competencies to determine what competencies or proficiency levels you need to change to give a more accurate representation. A brief overview of the steps for identifying the relevant competencies for a profile is provided in the resource, Adapting the Proficiency Profiles.

A job competency profile includes only the critical competencies required for the job, not those that are “nice to have”—that is, not essential to performing the job successfully.

Preferably, each profile should have no more than 12 competencies.

It may be that the competencies related to the performance objectives are not all identified in the planning stage. Others can be added as needed. Typically, each performance objective has one related competency or more.

To assist you in planning the initial review, sample performance objectives have been provided. They relate to the behavioural competencies in each job profile.

Ensure that all performance evaluations are conducted in accordance with existing organizational policies and procedures.

How to Use this Form

INITIAL PLANNING: At the beginning of the performance cycle (on or immediately following the anniversary date of the employee)

The manager and employee meet to discuss and agree on the key performance objectives and related competencies for the review period.

- The performance objectives can be task- or activity-based, or can be competency-based objectives (see below, Part A: Performance Planning and Review).
- In almost all cases, identified performance objectives (the “what” of the job) can be related to particular competencies required to achieve them (the “how” of the job).
- If this is the first year a performance review has been conducted, the manager and the employee might not yet be able to identify any learning and development needs. They can have an initial discussion about what these might be, based on the employee’s own performance development concerns.
- If this is not the first year, the manager and the employee confirm the learning and development needs identified at the end of the previous cycle.

INTERIM REVIEW: During the cycle (6-month review or equivalent)

The manager and employee meet to review progress in achieving performance objectives and begin to identify areas for development. Formal reviews might also be conducted throughout the period; for example, when either the manager or employee changes jobs, when there is significant change in the existing job or at the end of a key milestone.

- Performance objectives might need adjusting if work or priorities have changed since the beginning of the cycle (see below, Part A: Performance Planning and Review).
- If this is the first year a performance review has been conducted, the manager and the employee can begin to identify learning and development needs (see below, Part B: Learning and Development).
- If this is not the first year a performance review has been conducted, the manager and employee review the employee’s accomplishment of the action plan so far and adjust, as necessary (see below, Part B: Learning and Development).

FINAL REVIEW: At the end of the cycle (on or near the anniversary date of the employee's hiring)

The manager and employee meet to discuss and agree on the key performance objectives and related competencies for the review period.

- Record the employee's performance for each of the required competencies (see below, Part A: Performance Planning and Review).
- For each objective, the manager and employee discuss the extent to which objectives were achieved. This is recorded in the "Results" section.
- In the "Rating" section, employee and manager use the rating scale provided at the end of this document to evaluate results.
- If this is the first year a performance review has been conducted, the manager and the employee work together to identify the learning and development needs and the required action plan for the following review cycle (see below, Part B: Learning and Development). Focus is on the most pressing learning needs (e.g., up to five areas for development).
- If this is not the first year, the manager and employee review the employee's accomplishment of the action plan throughout the previous year (see below, Part B: Learning and Development).

SIGN OFF: At the end of the cycle (on the anniversary date of the employee's hiring)

- The manager prepares the final summary review and evaluation, and reviews the results with the employee (see below, Part C: Final Evaluation).
- The manager and employee jointly determine and agree to an action plan to enhance performance and results. This plan includes action to be taken by both the manager and the employee (see below, Part C: Final Evaluation).
- The employee comments on their own performance over the review cycle and the results (see below, Part C: Final Evaluation).
- The original of the completed form is placed in the employee's Human Resource file and the manager gives a copy to the employee.

PART C: Summary Review and Overall Evaluation

- After discussion on Parts A and B, the manager prepares summary comments on the employee's overall performance during the review period and rates the employee's performance.
- The employee and manager agree on a mutual action plan, recording the actions to be taken by the manager and employee to achieve desired results (includes making funds, time and resources available, as necessary).
- The employee records summary comments on own performance and the review process, as desired.
- Both the manager and employee sign the evaluation.
